PREFACE.

As few works are without a preface, and as it appears to the author of this compilation, entitled "ORIENTAL ERAS," that he will be deviating from long established usage, were he to omit so necessary an antecedent to most works, he will here point out the use, nature and object, of this compilation, by way of introduction to what is to follow.

This compilation of "Oriental Eras" comprises the various annual divisions, or eras in use amongst Christians, Hindoos, Mahomedans, Parsees, Arabians, &c., commencing from the Christian era, and continued to A. D. 1900, the whole arranged in juxtaposition and accompanied by chronological notices of important events connected with India and the East.

To every one eagaged in the service of the Government of India, the utility of this work will be great, especially should their employment or recreation render it necessary to refer to the corresponding dates in other eras than such as happen to appear on the face of public or other records, as Treaties, grants, bonds and engagements. To make the work more easy of reference to such as have occasion to refer to sunnuds, grants of lands, &c. under the Mahratta Dynasty, an era, commencing with the reign of Sivajee, is inserted with the corresponding years in other modes of reckoning time. The reader will be enabled, at a glance, to ascertain the corresponding years of eight different eras, all more or less used in the East, and to which there is frequent occasion to refer by most persons engaged in public departments, or in the pursuit of historical researches of Eastern nations, or in the minor matters connected with the transactions of Government.

The author needs scarcely state, that this compilation will be found of incalculable benefit to the Officers of the Survey now actively engaged in their operations in the Deccan and the Southern Mahratta Country; as well as to every Judge, Collector, Residents at all Foreign Courts, &c. in their several official capacities.

The author begs here to offer a general tribute of thanks to the Government of Bombay, the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, and to subscribers in general, for their great encouragement and patronage;—and he cannot omit to offer his grateful acknowledgements to W. C. Wood, Esq. for the kind assistance he has received from him, on various occasions, in the prosecution of his labours.

In conclusion, the author would merely add that if he has by this compilation facilitated references to years, and chronological events, his design will have been fully accomplished.

INTRODUCTORY OBSERVATIONS.

PECULIAR interest is felt by men of every nation to mark and trace the different eras of antiquity by comparing them with each other; and while the origin of eras has, in some instances, been veiled in obscurity, chronographers, through the medium of coins, have been enabled to trace the origination of eras to remarkable events, and to mark their progress. Chronology is important as a branch of study, since it makes us acquainted with historical events or epochs. It has been well said "that the practical use of past "events is the effect that the antecedent event has upon the con- "sequent, and if we mistake the order of succession, we are in a "similar condition to a man travelling on the road from London to "Dover, in order to arrive to Liverpool".—The ancient Eras are more numerous in India than in Europe, and the grand principle which has actuated their establishment may be attributed to the same cause; for instance, a nation arriving at some degree of significance fails not to record the events of its own history by beginning with some great or remarkable event, as a fixed period or epoch from which to narrate the succession of events. In no instance, perhaps, is this more clearly illustrated than with the Oriental Eras in use in India; hence their identification is desirable. But important as the just cited example is, it is not the only one that has induced the compiler to frame the following Table of "Oriental Eras" with their corresponding English one; another is suggested by the following circumstance, viz.

That much labor is required at present by officials and others, translating ancient sunnuds and documents, setting forth claims for lands, stipends, and allowances in India, to give the English year corresponding with the native years. It is the express order of Government that no dates or years should be given in official documents without corresponding English eras.—Now, however, difficult this may be to those residing in India, the difficulty is greatly augmented in reference to the authorities in England, where native dates or years are more seldom referred to, and less understood; or where works of reference are of so intricate and complicated a nature as to require time and attention to understand them. The present eras are so arranged as to facilitate reference, and render their use intelligible to the most ordinary capacity. But the mere arrangement of the various eras in use in India would be incomplete without connecting their enumeration with important events, and especially such as relate to, or are connected with, the nations and people whose several eras are noted.

The chronological notices moreover being in juxtaposition with the years to which they relate, are, doubtless, calculated to be of the greatest utility to Europeans in this country, who are constantly in the habit of referring to voluminous works respecting circumstances connected with India, and it is not less important to native students of European literature and history, who have no previous acquaintance or knowledge of such subjects.

The compiler commences this table from the Christian era, and ends with the year 1900. The names of the nonths will be found in the monthly Indian Calendar, which shews the correlative dates according to the various modes of reckoning time amongst Europeans and natives. This Table is therefore confined to placing in juxtaposition the years, and comprises the following eras —Sumvutsur, Arabic, Shalivan Shuk, Hijree Sun, Fuslee Sun, Yezdezerd or Nowroz, Malabar or Purushram, Sivajee's reign, and the Christian era.

The Hindoo and Arabic eras are those which are mostly in use in the Deccan, and the Southern Mahratta Country, in all official native correspondence; and it may be added, that the years are written according to them by the natives in all bonds, and deeds of contract, and generally in all letters of correspondence. The era Purushram is used in the same way by the natives of Malabar. The era Yezdezerd, III. or Nowroz, is used principally by the Persians and Parsees.—The others are comparatively of little use, being nearly obsolete, but as they are occasionally referred to, the table would be incomplete without them. The several eras thus arranged will serve as a ready concordance, whenever occasions may render a reference to them necessary. The Arabic, Fuslee, and English, are those in constant use in official transactions with India.

Sumvutsur means any year of the sixty comprising the Indian Cycle; the period from which this mode of reckoning dates its existence, cannot be ascertainied, although some of the most learned Shastrees have been questioned upon the subject. The following circumstance will, however, shew the light in which the Hindoos regard its origin.—It would appear that "Narud" (a holy sage), who possessed more or less of a divine nature, and who had obtained this divinity by rigid abstraction and mortification, in the midst of his devotion and piety, thought of uniting himself with a woman; for this purpose he applied to Krishna (a deity under human form), who in reply told him that it did not become a person of his profession and pursuits to think of becoming a family man, and having cares in matters connected with the world, and that he should abandon, if possible, so ridiculous an idea, and follow, intensely and unremittingly, his sacred and heavenly avocations. But this advice would appear to have been given in vain; for "Narud" the holy sage, was determined to follow the bent of his inclinations When Krishna saw he was inexorable, he told him that he had sixteen thousand wives, and that if one could be found while he was not present, that he was welcome to have her. Considering this a favorable answer to his petition, and the possibility of Krishna having no occasion for so great a number of wives, he set to most assiduously for the task of "searching for a wife;" but unfortunately for him, all his exertions and endeavours proved fruitless; for wherever he went, there he found the invincible Krishna. At last, Krishna in pity for him, told him to desist from his pursuit, as there was no possiblity of his succeeding in his wish of getting married, having children, and becoming like the rest of worldly men, but that he would recommend his washing himself in the holy stream and partaking of food with him. This advice the sage accordingly followed, and after immersing himself in the water, having raised himself up he found that he was metamorphosed into a beautiful woman, and in coming out of the water he found that his former clothes and a few other articles which he possessed, had vanished, and in their stead, the apparel and other paraphernalia of a woman, richly and superbly embroidered and set with gold, pearls, and emeralds, left on the ground near the water's edge for him, which he of course took and wore. Shortly after he had arrayed himself in these costly clothes, Krishna came there in the shape of a human being mounted on a splendid and highly comparisoned steed, and took him away for his wife. In this capacity he, or rather let us say, she, gave birth to a child every year for sixty years, and after her sixtieth child, she was distressed with her numerous progeny and its consequent annoyances and evils, and so begged of her husband, who had the gift of divinity, to transform her into her orignial state, as she did not like to undergo the difficulties, the cares, perplexities, and the responsibility, which devolve on a mother. Krishna then replied that now you have no doubt experienced what it is to become one of the world, and to remove you to your original state, you must again perform the same ablutions as you did at first, and then you will be restored to your former position, as a holy sage and devotee. She acknowledged she had transgressed very seriously, that she regretted the step she had taken, and that she would proceed to the river, and perform the ablution he directed. She did so, and was metamorphosed into "Narud" again. The children, it would appear, on attaining the age of discretion were desirous of obtaining to heavenly attributes. Being of divine origin, they were therefore taken up to heaven. So from this period Krishna ordained that the people on the earth should make use of the sixty Sumvutsur yearly, in regular succession, and hence it is said the observance of the Sumvutsur.—This definition of its origin, though altogether fabulous, is given here to shew the notion that is entertained of it by the Hindoos; coming as it does from their unerring work (as they would seem to think) called the Shastras, they of course implicitly believe in it; but the fact of it can be no other than the commencement of this mode of reckoning is of so ancient and remote a date, as not to be traceable by them. Menu, who wrote the Shastras, gave no doubt the Sumvutsur the semblance of divine origin, as in all matters connected with their false and deluded religion. Indeed, it is to be deeply lamented that the Hindoos* cannot be said to have ever had a good and conscientious Historian. Their notices of things and circumstances are in truth mixed up so much with fable and extravagances bordering on the marvellous that, one is often at a loss to find out the establishment of any event or epoch, and as it is doubtful when this era was introduced, we have commenced it from the year 79 A. D. which will answer every purpose of the present work.

The ARABIC YEAR commences from 600, and is the year from which the Arabs count their era. It took its rise from the circumstance of Musruk, who succeeded Ahraba his father on the throne in A.D. 589, and during whose reign one Sief bin Deo Yezur, an offspring of the ancient Royal Hemyaride family obtained the assistance of a Persian army under Shiraz, with the aid of which he put an end to the Ethiopian power. This although a Mahomedan era, was extensively used by the Mahratta Governments in their official documents, &c. and is still in general use among the natives of India.

* "A Hindoo can speak of nothing soberly, not even in his common conversation. Let not the reader suppose, however, that this disposition in the Hindoo to swell and magnify the most common occurrence arises from his living in the land of the gods. Idolatry when familiarized to the sight, loses all its fascinations. The Priest who daily bathes, wipes, anoints, and dresses the idol of his temple, has perhaps a meaner idea of the gods than any of his countrymen. It is true, a degree of "enthusiasm is excited at the festivals, during the idolatrous processions, but it is the enthusiasm of a mob in England surrounding a Guy Fox. It is the crowd, the music, the shouts, which excite it, and not the whisp of straw. This proneness of the Hindoos to magnify objects and events, may rather be ascribed to climate, to the magnificence of the mountains, the plains, the rivers, and to the various objects of nature around them, than to the florid allusions of their Poets. To whatever causes, however, we ascribe this propensity, it must ever be lamented that it has contributed so much to throw all the events of their country into in extricable confusion." Ward's His. Lit. &c. of the Hindoos.

SHALIVAN is the name of an ancient sovereign of India, the founder of an era bearing his name, which is coeval with the Christian year 79, and is still current. The significance of his name (शालि from शालि the Shorea robusta and वाहन् a vehicle, he being represented as borne upon the cross of that or some other kind of wood), and the circumstances of his birth, he is identified by Wilford with Christ. Prior to Shalivan establishing himself in independence, and fixing the northern boundary along the line of the Nerbudda, the king of Oujein is supposed to have held under his sway, the countries south of the Nerbudda. Shalivan, or otherwise called, the Rajah of the Deccan, gained a very memorable and decided battle over Vikramajit I.

"VIKRUM" or VIKRUMAJIT is the founder of the era, which commences in the year 57 B. C. or in other words in the 14th year of the Hindoo Cycle. Vikrumajit is the name of a celebrated Prince, the sovereign and reputed founder of an era still in use northward of the Nerbudda, and which commenced 57 years before the Christian era. There are many other princes of this name. A remarkable feature in the character of this prince was, that he gave great encouragement to learning and the fine arts; hence his name is to this day cherished and revered among the Hindoos, as one of the wisest and greatest princes. This era is exclusively adapted to the luni-solar system.

It would be as well here to remark that the Hindoo solar year is strictly sidereal; it is the measurement of that space of time during which the sun departs from a given star, and returns to the same in his supposed, or rather apparent, revolution of the zodiac. The natives in the most remote and antiquated period of their astronomical calculations, and prior to the establishment of the solar zodiac, the Shastrees or otherwise called Pundits, who were eminent for their knowledge of such sciences, considered the beginning of the year at the entrance of the sun into Aswini, the first of the 27 Nukshutras or mansions of the fixed lunar zodiac. It is supposed however that about the year 1181 B. C. the solar zodiac was formed from the lunar one. The names of the months would appear to have been taken from those of the lunar mansions, in which the moon happened to be full in the year of its establishment.

Some of the first authors on astronomical and chronological computation of the Hindoos, supposes that a lunar Cycle, or luni-solar period was, about the same period above adverted to, discovered. In every 247 years and 1 month there are 3056 lunations, which caused the initial month of the year to change its name during every repetition of this period. The first was "Aswini," commenced 1st September 1192 B. C. The second was "Kartik," began 1st October 945 B. C. The third was "Agruhayana," or as it was formerly termed Margshersh, began 29th October 698 B. C. The fourth was Poush began 25th December 451 B. C. The fifth was "Magha," began 25th December 204. The sixth was "Phalgoon," began 23rd January 44, A. D. The seventh was "Chaitra," began 21st February 291. The eighth was "Vaishak," began 22nd March, 538 A. D. The signs, months, and lunar mansions as used by the Hindoos, are as follows:—

Hijree is the Mahomedan era which commences with the flight of Mahomed from Mecca to Medina. The 16th July 622 marks the date from which the Mahomedans count their era; with it commenced a war against the opposers of the new religion—at the time when Mecca was conquered, when the tribes of Arabia joined in the acclamation and declaration that "there was no God, but Allah and Mahomed, his apostle." The Prophet directed the spread of Islaim over all countries, and to unite into one body a community by conquest or by faith all the nations of this habitable globe. Mahomed died at Medina the 8th of June 632, in the sixty-third year of his age. The Hijree year is purely lunar, divided into twelve months, and commences with the new moon; hence it has no intercalation to bring the commencement of the year to the same season—every year begins much earlier in the season than the preceding.

It is also remarkable that a cloudy day or two during the monsoon, is likely to delay the commencement of a month, which will of course make the preceding month longer than usual, and it is not less remarkable that in consequence of the same circumstance, there will sometimes be a difference of a day or two in parts of the same country. The Persians and the Turks use alternately 30 and 29 days, making the year to consist of 354 days, but one day added to the last month eleven times to every 30 years, gives 355 days to those years. According to this calculation the error is very trifling, and will only amount to a day after the expiration of two or three thousand years.

FUSLEE is taken from the season of harvest. It commences from the month of June, and it is otherwise called Mrigsal. It is supposed to date its origin from the Emperor Akbar's accession to the throne. The era is supposed to commence from the year 591 A. D., but nothing decided can be ascertained as to the circumstance connected with its origin, as it is enveloped in some obscurity; but Grant Duff, in his History of the Mahrattas, states that the era of the Deccan owes its origin to the Emperor Shah Jehan, who, after bringing his wars to a close in 1636, made a settlement of the country, and introduced the revenue system of Tudor Mul, the able and celebrated minister of the Emperor Akbar. It is very probable that the era at this period underwent a change, and although the era existed prior to this period; yet it is more than likely that it was in the latter year, when the survey and assessment was introduced by this able minister, that it was called the "Revenue year." The Madras Government has made a slight change in this era by fixing its commencement to the 12th July. Its subdivisions are but little attended to, and it is of little or no importance, the main object of its application being in Revenue matters.

MALABAR is the era of Purushram a celebrated Prince of that country, and it is supposed to have commenced about the year 176 before Christ. It is reckoned in cycles of 1000 years. The commencement of the 1000 years of the 3rd cycle, concurs with A. D. 1825. The year is solar, and commences when the sun enters the sign Canya (Virgo) ,corresponding with the solar month Aseen (Aswina). The country in which it is used, is a province of Southern India. It is bounded on the north by Canara; on the east by Coorg, Wynaad, and Coimbatoor; on the south by the territory of the Cochin Rajah, and on the west by the Indian Ocean.

YEZDEZERD, or more properly called Yezdezerd III, is the name of an ancient king of Persia, who succeeded to the throne of that principality in the year 632 A. D., in which year Persia was attacked by the Arabs, from which period commences the career of Mahomedan conquest. The Parsees also make use of this era in their writings, as they were originally inhabitants of Iran or Persia, but after the conquest of their country by Caliph Omer in A. D. 642, they left their houses and emigrated to Ormus, and subsequently to Surat, Nowsarie, and Bombay, where there exists large communities of them; they are not Mahomedans, but adhere to the religion of Zoroaster, as it is written in the Zend Avasta Zurthust. The year originally consisted of 365 days only, but subsequently underwent reformation by Malik Shah Jelaluddin, Sultan of Khorasan, by a day being added whenever it should be necessary to postpone the commencement of the following year; so that it might occur on the very day the sun is passing the same degree of the ecliptic. This occurred once in four years, but after the lapse of seven or eight years it was postponed for a year. This arrangement made the calendar perfect.

There is a difference in the manner in which the Parsees compute their era. Some begin in September, and others in October. It is also important to know that every day of the Persian month has a different name. The months are each 30 days, and the intercalation of 5 or 6 days occurs at the end of Aban. The names of the months are as follows, Ferwardeen, Ardchehest, Kurdad, Tir, Merdad, Sherier, Meher, Aban, Ader, Dei, Behmen, Espendarmud.

Raj ABHESHUK* or era of Sevajee, owes its origin to the rise of the Mahratta power under the famous Sevajee, the founder of the Mahratta Empire. Grant Duff fixes the commencement of this era from the date of Sevajee's ascending the throne on the death of his father Shajee in the year 1664, which is supposed by him to be the year he first assumed the title of Rajah, and struck money in his own name. But we presume this must have been a typographical error; for, in tracing back Sevajee's reign from recent State documents which have come into our hands, his ascension to the throne would appear to date from the year 1674 and not 1664; as stated in the work above quoted, which makes a difference of 10 years between the two computations. The former is also corroborated by the native annual calendars that are framed by some of the learned Shastrees in Poona. The author has in consequence commenced this era from the year 1674.

A second and third table will be found to be annexed to this work, shewing the names of the months and weeks as used by nearly all the oriental nations, but they will of course not be found to correspond with the Christian month. Our preceding observations on the different eras will have fully shewn the cause of this circumstance, thereby doing away with any further eclaircisement on this point. The manner the first half and second half of the month, as reckoned by the Hindoos, is also appended. The first half is called the Sukla Puxa, and the second the Krishna Puxa.

As a brief definition of the calendar of months, as arranged by Julius Cæsar, their origin and the irregularity in the number of days contained in each, may not prove uninteresting to our readers, we will endeavour to exhibit these particulars to the best of our ability.

The lunar month contains a period of 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes and 3 seconds, during which time the moon performs a revolution round the earth. The solar month contains 30 days 10 hours 30 minutes, during which time the motion of the earth in its orbit causes the sun apparently to pass through one of the signs of the Zodiac.

Julius Cæsar arranged the 12 calendar or civil months by which the year is computed by us as follows: The odd months, January, March, May, &c. he allowed thirty-one days, and the even months, April, June, August, &c. thirty days, with the exception of February which had thirty days in leap year only, and in other years it consisted of 29 days.

Numa Pompilius, who is said to have fixed January as the first month of the year, named it after Janus. He was a prince who is supposed to have been taught by Saturn, the art of dividing the year, as a reward for his hospitality to the gods. February is derived from Februo which is the month the Romans offered expiatory sacrifices. March is named in honor of the god Mars, and was considered by the Romans, under the founder of Rome commonly called Romulus, as the first month of the year. April from the Latin word Aprelis, derived from Aperis (Jopen), because that year the earth opened its bosom for the vegetable production of grass, herbs and flowers. May is said to have its origin from Maia, the mother of Mercury, to whom sacrifices were offered in the commencement of that month; by others again it is supposed to derive its name from Majorium, or as it is commonly written Maiorum, in consequence of festivals having been then held in honor of the senators who were called Majores. June was called from Juniorum, because feasts were then given and celebrated in honor of the young men, juniores, who had fought for their country. July was named by Mark Antony, in honor of that great man Julius Cæsar, this being the month which gave him birth; it had previously been called Quintilio, being the fifth month of the year, counting from March. August called by the Romans Sextiles or the sixth, received its present name from Augustus Cæsar, through whose vanity it would seem we are indebted to the present irregularity in the number of days as contained in the different months. Having felt a degree of envy (one of the weeds of the human heart) that the month which bore his name should be inferior to the one named after Julius (which contained thirty-one days ) he took one day from February, which was already minus, and added it to August. The month of September was called from the mere circumstance of its being the seventh month, when the year commenced in March. The months of October, November, and December, have also no remarkable circumstance connected with their origin, further than their signification is derived from being at one time the eighth, ninth and tenth months, respectively.

Romulus, the first king of Rome, to whom we are indebted for the framing of the first Roman Calendar, divided the year into ten months only, consisting of an unequal number of days, and beginning with March. The total number of days at that time was reckoned at only 304, but as it was not long after discovered that the civil year( constituted as this was), was considerably shorter than the solar year, two months were added to every year by him; but those were not inserted in the calendar, nor were any names given them till the following reign.

In connection with the table of weeks we will endeavour to explain the origin of the English week. There are various controvertible opinions of the origin of the division of time into weeks. Some suppose that the four intervals between the change in the phases of the moon first gave rise to it; others again suppose, but we think with little or no probability, that the use of weeks among eastern nations was derived from the practice of the Jews, to whom God appointed six days for labor and the seventh for rest, with the view of keeping up the knowledge of the creation. Grotius however accounts for its existence in the East by supposing it to be founded upon the remains of a tradition of the creation which was retained by these nations; as knowledge was first taken from the East, so it is supposed that the division was not received in the West until brought in by Christianity. The Romans had a different method of reckoning their week. It was not by sevenths but by ninths, and the ancient Greeks by decads or tenths. The seven days of the week are named by some nations of antiquity, by the most ancient and remote system of astrology, each day being named after the planet which was supposed to preside successively over each hour of the 24th of each day, and they are, to some extent, retained by the moderns.

In Italian, Sabato signifies Sabbath, and Dominica, or Lord's day, is derived from Dominicus; another mode of reckoning is still used, namely Lunedi or Moon's day, Martedi or Mar's day, Grovedi, Jove, or Jupiter's day and Venerdi Venus' day. In French, the names of the days are derived from the same source. Sunday and Moon or Monday have been retained by the English, while the Deities of the Scandinavian Mythology have been substituted for the other; Tuesday is derived from Tuesco, who was identical with Mars; Wednesday from Woden or Mercury; Thursday from Thor (god of thunder) or Jupiter; Friday from Frea or Frigga, Venus; and Saturday fron Seater or Saturn. The present English names are derived from the Saxon as follows:

| Saxon. | English. |
| Saturn's day, | Saturday, |
| Sun's day, | Sunday, |
| Moon's day, | Monday, |
| Tieo's day, | Tuesday, |
| Woden's day, | Wednesday, |
| Thor's day, | Thursday, |
| Friya's day | Friday. |

Table No. 3 will be found to exhibit in one view corresponding years, of Soorsun, Fuslee, Christian, Shalivahan, and sixty years Cycle commencing from A.D. 1679 to 1858. The author is indebted and owes his thanks for this table to a highly talented and distinguished Gentleman of the Civil Service.
